DAY 1: WHITEFISH

Using this Crown of the Continent itinerary, visitors arriving from Canada can access Montana via the Port of Roosville. Spend the rest of your travel day in Whitefish, a town that's earned the title "recreation capital of Montana." A fitting claim – this charming small town is nestled at the base of Big Mountain and only 40 miles from Glacier National Park.

Downtown Whitefish is perfect for leisurely strolls from galleries and shops to eateries. Much of the grub is fresh, local and handmade. Tupelo Grille serves up good Cajun fare – shrimp and grits are just the beginning. Montana-grown flavors blend with handmade Mexican cuisine at Pescado Blanco. And for breakfasts, burgers and "oilcloth elegance," locals like the Buffalo Café.

Shopping is near the top of any Whitefish to-do list, from local arts to log furnishings to just about anything huckleberry. Must-stop places for one-of-a-kind finds include Montana Territory, Bookworks and The Purple Pomegranate.

If you're traveling with a campstove and espresso pot, a quick stop at Montana Coffee Traders will score some locally crafted beans. There's also a fine selection of coffee tackle, locally made gifts and a tour highlighting how this acclaimed beanery came to be.

Whitefish Mountain Resort's Walk in the Treetops is one of the area's striking outdoor activities. A short bike ride segues into a naturalist-led hike through the forest canopy on a boardwalk suspended 60 feet above ground. Brace for glorious views of mountains and lakes, where red-tailed hawks, western tanagers and kinglets vie for your attention.

History buffs will enjoy the Great Northern Railway Depot. Here, Amtrak trains still come and go in the same fashion as the early models that brought tourists to Glacier. Through collections that span from fur trapper times to the early days of skiing, the Stumptown Historical Museum tells the story of how the logging camp of Stumptown became Whitefish.

DAY 2: GLACIER NATIONAL PARK

You'd be hard pressed to find a more scenic drive in the lower 48 than Going-to-the-Sun Road. A wilderness of lakes, towering peaks and remnants of glaciers is readily accessible off road or on. (This is a seasonal road. It is suggested that visitors check road conditions when planning their trip.)

Before starting the drive, swing into West Glacier. Visit the historic Belton Chalet and browse the shops in the Village. The Village also includes a train depot, grocery store and restaurant.

Lake McDonald, Glacier National Park

Going-to-the-Sun Road. This is just a sample itinerary. Feel free to improvise or follow the path less taken. Whether you drive yourself or hop a Red Bus Tour, you will find plenty of opportunities to gaze at roadside scenery and stretch your legs on trails.

Even the shortest hikes are well worth the stop. If you have kids in tow, the Trail of the Cedars is a perfect walk. The one-mile boardwalk path cuts through lush old growth western red cedar and hemlock forest.

The road continues to wind up and around the giant switchback known as "The Loop." From here, you climb to Logan Pass at 6,700 feet. The Visitor Center features alpine-zone plant and animal exhibits. A broad selection of trails are within easy access. Hidden Lake Overlook is a three-mile round-trip trail through alpine meadows frequented by marmots, ptarmigan and mountain goats. The Highline Trail is another hike that really doesn't feel like a hike. The fairly level terrain, above-timberline views and chattering marmots help with that. After enjoying leisurely pursuits outdoors, hop into the car and coast down the other side of the mountain. The east side of the park is drier, but no less beautiful.

St. Mary Lake is the next stop. The Sun Point trailhead is a veritable "peak-finder." Nine peaks are visible from here, including Going-to-the-Sun Mountain at 9,942 feet. The Sun Point Nature Trail is a gently sloping .7 miles, or you can extend the walk to 2.8 and take in St. Mary Falls and Virginia Falls.

Boat tours of St. Mary Lake set out several times a day from the Rising Sun complex. The sunset cruise is top notch if you're in this neck of the woods around 6:30pm. An evening stay in the St. Mary sets you up for gorgeous dawn views of the lake.

DAY 3: GLACIER TO ROOSVILLE

This morning, a back track along the Going-to-the-Sun Road will offer an unforgettable view of Wild Goose Island in the dawn light. (Watch for the pullout just past Rising Sun.)

Or, you can return to Roosville via Highway 2 which skirts the southern and western borders of Glacier and crests the Continental Divide at Marias Pass.

The Highway 2 route passes The Walton Goat Lick, an exposed river bank cliff where mountain goats perpetually graze and lick the mineral-laden rock.

Both Highway 2 and Going-to-the-Sun Road will take you back to West Glacier. If you drive back over Going-to-the-Sun Road, you will have a chance to check out Lake McDonald Lodge. Grizzly bear hides are draped over balcony railings, magnificent animal heads are everywhere and pictographs drawn by Charlie Russell adorn the massive walk-in fireplace.

The Belton Chalet in West Glacier is well worth a stop, too, or even another night's stay, if you can't bear to go home just yet. Fine dining, spa and other comforts call to mind its elegant history as Glacier's first Great Northern Railway hotel.

If your trip really must end today, West Glacier and Whitefish are great spots to stop for a bite to eat and perhaps some last minute shopping on the way back to Roosville. Before you reach the Canadian border, the Eureka Riverwalk is a pleasant 2-mile stretch along the Tobacco River or explore the Tobacco Valley Historical Village. Have a safe trip north.
